Quinn Strong Park is a small civic green that is hidden behind a senior center one block west of Maitland Avenue South. The park hosts community activities and includes features such as:

- pavilions,
- large grassy areas,
- bicycle racks,
- shaded park benches and tables,
- paved walkways for strolling,
- shuffleboard courts,
- horseshoe pits,
- and a senior center.

From time to time the City of Maitland also plays movies on a screen “Movies Under the Stars” which is one example of how Quinn Strong Park serves as a place for the community to gather.

The park is nearby many civic institutions. The northern edge of the park, just north of Packwood Avenue, is framed by the Maitland Art Center (which is one of the last places in the country that displays “Mayan Revival”), the Maitland Historical Museum, and the Art Center Research Studio. The park is also nearby the library, the civic center, and Lake Lily a quarter mile to the south. There is potential in connecting these civic uses even further.
